And the death toll is already at two. Michael Burgess, spokesman for the Caribbean's St. Vincent and the Grenadines, said he expected "at least a thousand" to die as Irma barrels into the Florida Keys and then up the state's east coast. He said that was an estimate, not a final count, but that the first reports from his country were of severe damage. In the British Virgin Islands, the U.S. Virgin Islands and St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Islands, storms damaged some 50% of their buildings. Officials from Puerto Rico said many islands suffered power outages, including the U.S. territory of Vieques, and the entire island of Culebra. On St. Vincent, a government spokesman said winds were especially strong at the airport and that a storm surge sent water rushing into the city. "We had a significant storm surge and the water hit almost the height of the window of the restaurant," said the spokesman, Sandy Hill Ncube. "I saw the water and I'm glad I wasn't there at the time. It could have been a lot worse. We're praying that the people who lost their homes will be able to rebuild it." The death toll from Irma's wrath is expected to grow as more storms sweep through the Caribbean. Two people have died in the U.S. Virgin Islands. Jeffrey Dennis, 52, died after taking shelter at the emergency shelter in St. Thomas, and Donald Polatnick, 62, was killed when he was swept away by floodwater. Gov. Kenneth Mapp has asked President Trump to declare a state of emergency in the U.S. Virgin Islands. Mapp is hoping that the administration will put on extra medical supplies and troops who could help rescue stranded residents. In the U.S. Virgin Islands, about 4,000 people have been evacuated and some people are stranded, officials say. Aerial photographs show flooding in St. Croix. In one image, floodwater is so deep you can see into the mansions
