Ancient Frontier is a turn-based strategy game in which you struggle to survive in a post-apocalyptic world that went through catastrophic war 30 years ago. You play as two factions, one good and one evil, battling it out for the future of the human race. The good: - Massive End-game focus! If you lose this game, you lose it badly! - More turns! - Turn based decision making! - You decide who gets the last turn! - Dialog! Not to mention lots and lots of dialog! What if there was a way to work out how to build a sentient spaceship? How about how to win a war or survive a shipwreck?! The other side - Arguably the worst AI of the first game! - Human-like, can get very angry! -

Army sizes are fixed! (Until you play a cunning victory pose...) – Metal and wood are the same! – The other faction can summon Gods and make you cry! – Death occurs in the middle of the turn! – Heavy units can run over you when they attack! – Of course, they still can't kill you! Important Information: Both games are available as Steam DLC. If you purchased Ancient Frontier, it's free and will be included with Ancient Frontier 2. Ancient Frontier 2 uses the same engine as Ancient Frontier. It's all part of the same complete game. Ancient Frontier 2 is still in Early Access but will be released soon. You can purchase the Steam version of this game and we will release a key soon for the new game. If you purchased the game via GOG, you can purchase it from our store. If you purchased the game via our store, the Steam version can be added to your GOG account, while the GOG version can be added to your Steam account. The upcoming video for the Steam version will be posted on our Youtube channel when it's ready. Ancient Frontier [April-2022]

The amazing game Ancient Frontier has launched a Kickstarter Campaign to help finish off the game. The game is a fantasy 4X Space RTS game with a unique battle system that challenges players to manage five different layers of combat, each with its own effect on a playable faction. In addition, players will have to manage resources and construct new technologies to continue to improve their armies. At the heart of the game is a deep economic and political system that encourages players to make hard choices between building and upgrading troops, buying and researching new technology, and warring with nearby nations to increase the resources they need to continue playing. Designed to be the ultimate strategy game, Ancient Frontier boasts fantastic visuals, a detailed combat system, a balanced tech tree, and plenty of replayability, as players will face challenges from all sides: against ancient enemies, against each other, and against time. The campaign will run for 10 weeks, and the team will use the funds to create a final version of the game, to create an iOS and Android version, to hire additional graphic and animation artists, to release additional content for the campaign, and to create new game features. I don't think that ever will be the case, considering the methods that people will try to prevent that. You can either buy a game or play it for free if you can just be the "donator". And I know that many people can't. That is one of the main problems of the industry and how many people have done.

I'd rather put money on a game I'm more interested in.

And I've actually tried it, and worked. I put a pre-order down for Heroes of Normandie. I did something similar for Battlestar

Galactica. Now some people don't mind spending money on the games they enjoy. But you can't always do that, and neither should you. And especially not in a new way, where you'll do the least you can to counter these ways.

I've bought a lot of games, that I never play. To not lose money, as I know I will not.

PEGI, anyone? Stop being fuckin' stupid! This is the leading cause of lost revenue for publishers, and nothing that piracy has done hasn't done more damage than this could ever do. If I had my druthers, I'd only let people download games if they have a record, and the library has no record.

Ancient Frontier Truth, Unity and Christianity in the Age of the Fathers By Timothy K. Beal Timothy K. Beal is author of The Rise of the Ancient Christian Monastic Movement, Oxford Monastic Texts and Signs, A Winter Night Engagement and A Prayer of Jesus. He was educated at Princeton University and a Visiting Fellow at the University of Edinburgh. He is a history and religion lecturer at Manchester University. He is a highly-skilled musician who plays the original Celtic harp from 8th-11th centuries AD by himself. When we think of the early church, we generally think of Paul, Peter, John and company. Equally as common as those heroes, but often overlooked, are the early fathers of the Christians - those who were simple, common and often humble men who for one reason or another deviated from the mainstream of life and became the first preachers of the Christian faith. Synesius was the first Christian bishop to practice asceticism to such an extent that Christians called him 'father of the ascetic'. He was the first bishop of the great fourth century city of Ptolemais in Egypt which is now modern El Qantara. The many hospitals he had founded were places of great care, rescuing the poor from poverty. He was educated in the classical world and befriended such illustrious philosophers as Alexander of Aphrodisias. He went on to devote his life to becoming a prophet of God and a prophet of his own time. At the episcopal consecration in 357 when Constantine made him a bishop, he was asked by his enemies to deny his faith but he refused. This would be a defining moment in the history of the church. When the emperor's soldiers tried to arrest him, he escaped to the Monastery of Antiphellus in Campania, where he lived for the remainder of his life as a hermit and teacher. His 36 years of solitary confinement out of sight and unseen were solitary years of prayer, fasting, chanting psalms and reading the Bible. With the support of the emperor, he was released from prison and returned to the city of his birth but he remained in retirement. He would have nothing to do with earthly rulers and saw them as the enemies of God. He would often preach to the people out of the church of St John. In 355 AD he was sent to visit some troubled monasteries in Phoenicia and I have never heard any
