They are also the weapon type most associated with realism. Their elegance is unmatched by any other weapon class. Assault Rifles are classified based on their rate of fire, damage, and accuracy. The rate of fire is determined by the amount of time it takes for the weapon to cycle from one shot to the next. It may vary from under a second to over a second. Damage refers to the amount of damage the weapon does. Each weapon has a certain base damage. With a high-rate of fire weapon, damage may be increased by adding an extension or a silencer to the weapon. The accuracy of a weapon is determined by what determines how well the weapon hits the target. This usually includes things like the weapon's scope, the amount of iron sights the weapon has, and the weapon's stock. Now you can make your own custom assault rifle. You start by picking a weapon class. You can choose between the AK-47, the Desert Eagle, the Desert Eagle.50, the AR15, and the Colt Police Positive. You then pick the type of weapon from that class. Choose from a side arm, a full-auto weapon, or a sniper rifle. Choose from every type of ammo, including iron, steel, and gold. There is also a back pack for you to carry all your supplies in. Once you have a weapon, you choose how it will look. You can choose between a feat. Deaths Icon - Revised Monsters With Possessions The pact based option offered by the character's pact allows you to have summoned creatures to be possessed by them. You can have only one such item in use at a time, and the duration of the possession cannot be more than one time per day nor more than one item at a time. While the possession is in effect, various aspects of their form are enhanced. For example, their Strength, Dexterity, Constitution, and Wisdom are each +1, and their Intelligence is +2. You or your companion can exchange possession with another creature (but not, for example, with the character who has a pact based item in their possession). You choose the target of the possession. The new creature, if one is chosen, remains intangible for one minute per rank of the possessed creature, or until freed by a free action. The possession cannot cause the target to act involuntarily or to become unconscious and must be released by a free action. Any weapon cannot affect the possessed creature, but it can move with the possessee's turn and hold objects as normal. If the target is a physical creature, any abilities which apply outside of the target's current form will apply normally.
