Marisah Kumbana. Therefore, the Commission for Legal Revision considers it appropriate to reiterate and further improve this regulation or perhaps consider amending it accordingly, in order to consolidate the legislation on tax matters. In this regard, it will be most appropriate to examine the possibility of extending the time limits under this section and/or imposing penalties on those who fail to respond to the Commission for Legal Revision within these time limits. The Commission for Legal Revision of the Constitution may impose on those who fail to respond to its summons a fine of not more than RM100 or a shorter period of imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month, or both. The Commission for Legal Revision may impose on those who fail to respond to its summons other appropriate sanctions, including the serving of a body search order on them. The Commission may also issue a body search order for the purpose of searching for the person who failed to respond to its summons. Upon the issuance of a body search order, the Commission may order the death or enforced disappearance of the offender. If the existence of the offence is proved, the offender shall be liable to arrest without warrant, under any of the laws of the Federation. If the offender is under the age of 18 years, he may be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years or fined not more than RM500 or both. Indonesia has the most flexible and least laborious penal code in the world, which is not a good thing. This flexible approach will have disastrous consequences. We have yet to see what the outcome of the implementation of these new laws will be, but we certainly can expect that when we have a new president next year that there will be even more poor people in Indonesia.
