and this is where we find ourselves. in 2015, the russian armed forces invaded a non-combatant country, not in defense of russian citizens, but in order to preserve the russian state against an idea that it has always repudiated. this is a different kind of imperialism. it is not the old imperialism that dominated the world for four centuries. it is not even the imperialism of the russian tsars that invaded and occupied the caucasus. it is a different imperialism, one that is in the service of ideas. it is the imperialism of the omnipotent state. and its method is not invasion, but occupation. and it is designed to crush the opposition, not to hold onto territory. the tsars would have been appalled by this. but to putin, it is entirely consistent with his philosophy, which is that ideas must not permeate the borders of the motherland. and so he has invaded a country in the name of ideas. the invasion is in the name of the russian state, and the russian state is the idea. it is its own idea. it is the idea that it is too great, too strong, and too proud to permit the invasion of its own borders. and the same is true for its own people. it is a self-contained idea, and it is so profound that it is, in the end, the idea that rules, and it is very difficult to imagine an idea that rules like that. it is the idea that the boundary of the motherland is the whole planet, and the whole world is, of course, the boundary of the motherland. and so if you want to keep your country safe and free, you must keep the whole world free and safe. this is the russian idea. and this is why putin is so proud of it, and why he came into power when he did. for it was the only thing that could save him from the destructive effects of the change that he knew was coming. after the collapse of the soviet union, the russian state was in a free-fall. the resources that it had squandered in the decades of the 1980s and 90s were completely dissipated, and its economy collapsed.

putin was to have said, i am very glad that you have kept your army intact and have retained your countrys borders, for that is what russia wants to do too. we want to integrate ourselves into the european union. but we do not want to be integrated into any of the european nations. we want to be part of the european union, but not be part of any of the european nations. we are part of europe, but we are not part of any of the european nations. we want to have our own borders, but not part of any of the european nations. the myth of the russian western-adversary has become a talisman for russian intellectuals. it has become the excuse and the justification for everything. as a result, it has, perhaps, done the greatest damage to russian policy in the world today. the point of the wests policies is to be hospitable to the people of russia, and to wish to see them prosper and to lead a life of liberty, dignity, and justice. they are not to be turned back into the world of soviet horror, and they are not to be made to be pariahs in their own land. no one, i believe, wishes to see the destruction of the russian state as the end of the wests policies and purposes. they are not hostile. only, they are, in the sense that the west would wish to see a prosperous and democratic russia. and they are, in the sense that the west does not wish to see russia become a police state, or the only power on the face of the earth. but the west does wish to see the wests values thrive and flourish in russia. it is not meant to be a hostile partnership. the west is not seeking to destroy russia, but to make it a better, more humane society. this is the wests deepest wish. and this is the wests deepest fear. it is not the wests fear of the russian state per se. it is a fear of the potential contact with the potential of the russian people, which would enable the west to realize the hope of their presence. 5ec8ef588b
